But such is the perfection reached in the art of applying common reached in the art of applying chapper to make costly or cheap, it is less to cultivate one acre thorough, posts well and make it, by manuring, produce as much as tan acres of virgin soil, than as much as ten acres of virgin soil, than to cultivate in the old-fashioned way the | @25c. ten acres, and gather its scattered, imper feet crop. This fact is especially applicable to cotton-picking, where the labor is lessened as the space to be gone over in Moreover, density of population is regulated by cheapness of bread. Europeans cannot bring with them corn (wheat) and beefsteaks, and with money these emigres are never overburdened. They don't fancy bacon and corn dodgers, and therefore the tide of European population passes across the continent, to a region in which wheat, because of its abundance and remoteness from the sea, is unsalegathering a fixed quantity, is narrowed. and remoteness from the sea, is unsaleable. We may make cotton enough to enshirt Alcorn's and the other Dahomey, and all the men and women thereof, but without cheap and abundant bread, no European or other laboring population, will ever seek abiding places in the South.
